

Good Day; If possible I would like my concerns about moving Medicaid management to the private sector read into whatever meeting or web site. My concerns include - Currently state employees manage this including managers and the people who do the work. Moving the management to the private sector will result in hiring managers and people who the work.

If my simple math is correct that should come fairly close to doubling the operating costs + still the overheads at the state level for benefits and such.

Wouldn't this then equal a significant cost to operate?

What would be so very wrong about taking a year to take a long hard look at costs vs savings including not only dollars but affects on patients and their ability to receive the at the very least the exact same level of service they receive today?

This whole push by the Governor gives me a sense of What isn't being made public and Something shady going on. Is there a rat in the woodpile so to speak.
thank you
